

Titus Chapter 2: Your Behavior Should Reflect Your Redeemed Nature

Ricardo Campos, Elder    Grace Chapel, Orange, CA    August 23, 2009

I. Introduction

Part of an elder's job is to teach the flock the type of blameless behavior that should characterize a child of God. But he must not only to teach about this behavior; he must be an example of it, an example for the flock to follow. In turn, every member of the flock should exhibit this behavior because God's grace is redeeming them from their sinful tendencies and teaching them to live in a godly manner.

II. Titus 2:1–10: Elders should teach every member of the flock the blameless behavior that should characterize them. A believer's behavior affects the way the world at large sees God and His Word; you are God's ambassador. But an elder is not just to teach about this behavior, he must be an example of it.

III. Titus 2:11–14: The reason believers should behave godly is because god's saving grace is delivering them from their sinful tendencies and teaching them to live in a godly manner.

IV. Titus 2:15–3:2: Elders should remind their flock of the blameless behavior that should characterize their actions.

V. Conclusion

Not only must an elder teach blameless behavior, he should model it for his flock. In turn, the flock should recognize that such behavior is to be reflected in their daily lives because God is redeeming them for this very purpose.
